Art & Politics: Packard Jennings

Visual and conceptual artist Packard Jennings talks about his work which ranges from digital subversions to quiet mail-in actions to large scale interventions on billboards. He also speaks about work that gets made and that which doesn't.

February 8

Citizen Science/Extinction Culture

Doing science and making culture are increasingly intertwined as more and more amateur naturalists crowdsource the multi-layered experience of life on this planet. Authors Mary Ellen Hannibal and Ursula Heise illuminate the tangled, dynamic processes of thinking and doing that help us understand where we are and what we can—or ought to—do about living through this heartbreaking Great Extinction.

February 22

Progressive Transgressions

Crossing centuries and social mores, editors Ivy Anderson and Devon Angus, (Alice: Memoirs of a Barbary Coast Prostitute) and author Clare Sears (Arresting Dress) take us into San Francisco's mid-1800s underworld to look at how normative ideas of sexuality were policed and created by widespread mid-1800s laws as well as challenged by gender defiers.

March 8

Local History in Your Ear

Podcasts are shaping the presentation of history through audio delivery. Hosts of several local series tell us why they chose this new technology to delve into the past and how they gauge success. Hear clips of each program in a special podcast challenge! With David Gallagher and Woody LaBounty of Outside Lands San Francisco, Liam O'Donoghue of East Bay Yesterday, and others TBA. .

March 22

We've Done This Before: 1980s Movements

The fight against the Reagan administration's war build-up, emergency response against Central American wars, birth of the Peace Navy, stopping the USS Missouri, creating sanctuary cities, AIDS and Anti-Nuclear activism. We bring it up to climate justice & no nukes today. With activists and archivists Marcy Darnovsky, Steve Stallone, and Lincoln Cushing.

May 3

Agents of Change!

Fred Glass, author of From Mission to Microchip: A History of the California Labor Movement, takes a long look at the labor history of California and Chris Carlsson, of Foundsf.org focuses on the ebb and flow of class war in San Francisco. With videos and debate!

Summer of Love or Vietnam Summer?

Music, Art, & Politics of 1967: Was it all peace and love or did the anti-war movement really define the era? A conversational antidote to the narrow interpretation of a memorable summer in the City. With Calvin Welch, Judy Goldhaft, Mat Callahan, and Pam Brennan.

June 7

Kent Minault's "Diggerly-Do's"

Kent Minault tells of the explosive first six months of the SF Diggers. Featuring stories of the San Francisco Mime Troupe, Tim Leary, Huey Newton, Lenore Kandel, Gary Snyder, the first Digger free food and Free Store, the Invisible Circus, photos by Chuck Gould, and music by Peter Coyote. The evening chronicles a turning point in SF and the transformation of a youth into a life-long activist.

Sunday, February 12, 12 noon-10 p.m. @ 518 Valencia

LOST LANDSCAPES MARATHON! — EIGHT YEARS, EIGHT SHOWS, TEN HOURS —

$20-$50 sliding scale donation requested to benefit Shaping San Francisco/Foundsf.org

Rick Prelinger started compiling feature-length programs of archival San Francisco film footage for Shaping SF in 2006. As word spread, the shows migrated to larger venues, and have now played for tens of thousands of people. Now Lost Landscapes of San Francisco returns as a marathon screening! The past eight programs (2009-2016) will play in order, combining in a festive 10-hour panorama of San Francisco life, landscape, culture, work, activism, and celebration from 1906 through 1980. The audience makes the soundtrack — so watch, comment, question, and discuss what you see and hear. Enter and leave any time during the day. Program notes describing the contents of the shows will be available at the screening. (Bring a cushion!)
